President's Message

Warren Everett

The busy holiday season will soon be upon us and in the midst of this is our annual Holiday Social on Wednesday, 4 December, held again this year at the Renaissance Centre on Queen Street. Each year we hold this event as an occasion, not only to gather together in a relaxed atmosphere and share the holiday spirit, but to present the Kingston Historical Society Awards to those who have given long and exemplary service in support of the historical heritage of the Kingston region. This is an important event for the Society and I urge you to attend. As in past years we will be seeking a donation at the door to offset the costs.

The 15 January 2020 meeting will be held in the main branch of the Public Library in Meeting Room #1 located on the second floor.

Murney Tower

Operated by the Kingston Historical Society

The 2019 season saw the installation of new panels on the barracks level of the Tower. The new panels are a great use of the space as they are tall and easy to move. The carronade was moved in preparation for the Indigenous panel and soundscape which was researched and designed by Dr. Terri-Lynn Brennan and made possible by the Community Foundation for Kingston and Area. Translations were by winTranslation. In preparation for the season staff acquainted themselves with tourism in Kingston. The MOP (Museum Orientation Pass) is back this year and the staff were thrilled to explore all of the partner institutions. The staff visited The Military Communications and Electronics Museum and received a tour from one of their senior guides which gave them ideas on how to engage visitors. Additionally, the 1000 Islands Cruises invited Murney Tower and other tourism staff to attend a sunset dinner cruise so they would be able to provide an authentic recommendation to visitors to Kingston. The staff greatly enjoyed these outings. They provided a chance for them to experience Kingston in a new way, to be better ambassadors of the city to visitors and to get to know one another.

STILL STANDING: Looking at Regional Architecture with Jennifer McKendry

It seems ironical that Dr Edward H. Horsey, 1838-1890, son of architect Edward Horsey, 1809-1869, retained in 1881 Joseph Power of Power & Son architects to design his brick house at 157 King St East at Lower Union. But his father was deceased and his architect brother Henry Horsey, 1830-1911, was presumably too busy with his projects in Ottawa. Edward Jr and his siblings grew up in Elizabeth Cottage, 251 Brock St, designed by their father.

A graduate of Queen's medicine in 1860, Edward Jr worked as a doctor in many locations, including Lanark County, Montreal, Washington during the American Civil War and Chicago, where he died in 1890. His body was brought back to Cataraqui Cemetery for interment in the family plot. He and his wife Frances used to return to Kingston for summer visits and, in 1881, they were included in the city census. They bought the land in August of that year and Power called for the building tenders. In the city directories of the '80s, they were living in their new Kingston house but, in the spring of 1889, sold it for $12,500 to Queen Victoria as a residence for the Commandants of RMC. In 1969, Queen Elizabeth sold it to Queen's University.

One wonders if Joseph Power was secretly pleased at its new use for the Commandant, given that Robert Gage, a rival for government projects, had designed just such a house (now known as the Hewitt House) on the grounds of RMC in 1875 -- but it was sharply criticized and the Commandants preferred 157 King East. Certainly, it was an impressive building due to its height, complex shapes (fig. 1, 1892 fire insurance plan) and large well-fenced lot. Furthermore, it was unusual due to the use of yellow brick, described at the time as "white brick with Ohio sandstone." Horsey must have admired a recently built neighbouring house, 49 King St East, also in yellow brick and by Joseph Power in 1879 in a more or less similar style.

Even with the loss of the upper part of the tower (fig. 2, 1904, coll. McGill University), it still commands attention.

For 114 years, the Lennox and Addington Historical Society has continued the goals established many years ago. Local residents, who expressed an interest in preserving the history of Lennox and Addington County, read with interest the following Notice in the Napanee Beaver, May 3, 1907:

“I have been requested to call a meeting for those interested in the history of the province, and more especially those who are interested in the history of Lennox and Addington”.

By May 9, 1907 the Society was organized; the Constitution was adopted June 11; the first open meeting was held October 25 and the Society was affiliated with the Ontario Historical Society March 31, 1908.

With the adoption of the Constitution the objectives were very clear: collection and preservation of historical documents and education about the importance of the past history of Lennox and Addington and the Dominion of Canada.

To fulfill these objectives, the Society found a home for an enlarging collection (an early archive) on the top floor of the Napanee Library. In 1907, a circulating letter was sent to prominent citizens to assist in the collection of materials for the Society. The requested items included maps, letters, books and newspapers. By 1913, the Society reported to the Warden and Council of Lennox and Addington that 18,000 original documents had been preserved.

The Society had a well-established tradition of publishing. The Society's Papers and Records numbered 20 volumes and the book, The War Years, was supplied to every school in the County. By 1954, after a period of dormancy, a concern was expressed by some citizens regarding the viability of the Society's collection. The Provincial Archives were interested in having the papers and letters. Wanting to keep the collection in the County, the Society reorganized in 1954, with Judge Gerald Smith as President. Under his presidency, the County Council granted a room in the County Memorial Building as a museum to house and display items. The museum was initially opened from 2-5 pm three times a week with volunteers from the local Women's Institutes, Chamber of Commerce and Historical Society members. However, the paper collection remained in the Napanee Library, and it was a concern to organize and catalogue the collection. Judge Smith initiated contact with the Dominion Archivist who offered to compile and microfilm the collection. By 1957, 40,000 documents had been microfilmed.

The Society has always been supportive of preservation of historical sites. The first initiative focused on Fairfield House, a Loyalist property built in 1793. The Society wished to purchase the house and the land surrounding it as an historical site. It did not acquire the site; however, the impetus was initiated with the Lennox and Addington Historical Society.

The Allan Macpherson House, located in Napanee, became the next historic site focus for the Society. A goal of $30,000 was set to be raised for restoration. In 1967, the County acquired the House as a Centennial project, with the Society charged with funding and restoring Macpherson House. Later, the Society purchased the house from the County, and continued to support the Macpherson House until it was acquired by the County once again in 2015 along with the Society's collection.

The collection is housed in the new addition of the County Museum where it is being preserved for the future. Presently, The Society continues its program of publishing local authors, has guest speakers for the general public, and supports local initiatives.

This history attributes the information provided to Jane Foster, LAHS member. For a more complete history of the Lennox and Addington Historical Society see Papers and Records Vol. XVI by Jane Foster.

On November 20th, local historian John Grenville provided a perspective on Kingston's crucially strategic military situation in the 1860s. On the one hand, Britain, having acknowledged responsible government in its central Canadian colonies, was eager to extract its garrison troops from North America. On the other hand, America descended into civil war, raising fears that the conflict might spill across the northern border. The result of this tension was a final decade of Britain's active military involvement in central Canada. Grenville chronicled the alarm of the British general staff over fears of an American incursion into the St. Lawrence Valley and Lake Ontario. A master plan for the land and sea defence of Kingston was developed by Royal Engineer William Francis Drummond Jervis. It entailed extensive fortifications of both harbour and hinterland. It was also extremely expensive, involving massive construction and costly garrisoning by British troops. Anxiety over possible conflict also provoked the preparation of a meticulously executed ordnance survey map of Kingston and its environs. This was undertaken by another Royal Engineer, Honorius Sisson Sitwell, and his team of “sappers” (military engineers) in the late 1860s. The originals of this many-sectioned map are now held at Britain's National Archive at Kew and are available for on-line viewing with copies available at the Queen's University map collection. Jervis' costly defence plan never materialized; the British would withdraw their Kingston garrison in 1871. The Sitwell map, however, survives and continues to be a boon to local heritage and history enthusiasts.
